Actor's Assisted Exit is Surrounded by Rather Violent Circumstances.

New York.-The hurried battering to and fro of a squeaky swinging door and the gentle thud of an actor en route from the bar to the pavement are sounds not unusual on, in and around Broadway-especially if it is a bad actor. The other day, however, an assisted exit was surrounded by such violent circumstances that a rather large audience gathered.

In this case the door was removed entirely, the actor went further, landed harder and bounded higher than usual and the remarks of the sole owner of the premises were nothing short of exquisite in their variety and intensity. Violence Ensued.

Inquiry within the damp room brought forth no satisfactory explanation. The customers had noticed a well dressed young man walk over to the owner and say about five words to Then the violence which ended with the young man's excursion out into the open began. This being so, there was nothing to do but to ask the boss about the mystery. He was approached as he sat having his shoes shined as if in an effort to begin life anew after a moment of horror. He told all—freely.

"Last night," he said, in a totally unconscious imitation of Lew Fields, "that actor came in here and began acting. He said he had just come back from the West and that he was as flat as a cookie and needed a dollar. I told him I needed a dollar. I told him I hadn't even the sport of going West and that I needed a dollar bad. I'd accept fifty cents even.

"Well, then he began acting. He rolled his eyes and asked it I was going to let him stay in the street and Worried the Boss.

"I couldn't get rid of him. Every time I waited on a customer he ran along in front of the bar parallel with me and asked me how I could act that way and if he hadn't been a good fellow when he had it. I never knew him when he had it, Well, anyway, he pleaded, demanded and talked about that dollar until one o'clock in the morning. When I started home be started after me.

"Up at the corner he asked me, throwing his arms out wide, if I realzed that there was one above looking lown on me and watching what I was joing to do about the dollar.

"Well, I can stand just so much. 1 Udn't have a cent in my pocket, but I alled to a hackman I know and asked him if he would let me have a quarter. He gave it to me and I gave it to that blockhead and told him that if I ever saw his face again I would knock him from under it. I bid him good-by forever in this life."

The boss paused.
"Well?" was the natural inquiry. "what happened today?"

The boss hissed through his teeth. "He came in and asked me for the seventy-five cents I owed him."
